Hello again INHWE Members! A new Special Issue invites research that advances understanding of interprofessional collaboration (IPC) and interprofessional education (IPE) as key approaches for improving the quality, safety, efficiency and person-centredness of health, social care and public health systems. Guest edited by fellow INHWE members Marion Huber and Mirjam Körner, the issue welcomes quantitative, qualitative, mixed-methods and evaluation studies exploring interprofessional competencies and leadership, teamwork and collaboration, patient-centred care and outcomes, assessment and evaluation, best practices and professional well-being. By bringing together evidence from diverse care and education settings, the Special Issue aims to strengthen knowledge of how collaborative learning and practice can support better patient outcomes, healthier teams and more integrated services. Manuscripts should be submitted online via www.mdpi.com by registering and logging into the MDPI submission system.
