

Our Membership in Athens and Online

Hello again INHWE Members! As you know we are holding an exciting event in Athens to mark the culmination of the DIGI4ME Project. As I reviewed the attendee list for the conference, I couldn't help but be struck by several aspects that I believe truly set our network apart and underscore its importance in the field of healthcare education. First and foremost, the geographic diversity of our attendees highlights the success of our mission to bridge the gaps created by physical distances. It is particularly pleasing to note that we've been able to support some of our members in making their journey to Athens, resulting in the presence of participants from over eight European countries. Furthermore, we're thrilled to facilitate part of the event online, welcoming an additional 60 participants from 14 different countries.

However, it's not merely the geographical representation that impresses us but also the number of different healthcare specialties that will attend the meeting. From nursing and medical professions to physiotherapy, pharmacy and medical physics, we even have colleagues from management and the legal field in attendance. Our commitment to being a truly interprofessional and multistakeholder network is highlighted by the diverse display of specialties represented at our events. Moreover, in keeping with our core values, we're delighted to see a diverse range of stakeholders engaged. Our membership is centered on enhancing healthcare education and training, recognizing that educators must collaborate with other stakeholders to effect meaningful change. It's gratifying therefore to see the participation of policy makers from EU ministries of health, as well as researchers from academic and non-profit organizations during this event. We firmly believe that the realization of our mission depends on fostering widespread networking and knowledge sharing among all members within the expansive healthcare education ecosystem. Seeing this vision come to life during this week is nothing short of fantastic.

For those who haven't yet had the chance to sign up, there is still time to register for the online portion of the meeting by clicking here. We also extend an open invitation for you to invite colleagues who may share an interest in this enriching experience.
